Weather Key Points

Regional Operations Center

Western Region

Sunday, September 4

- A dangerous heat wave will continue across much of the state through late week before cooler temperatures finally arrive toward next weekend
  - High to very high heat risk impacts will occur in many areas
  - Widespread daytime temperatures of 95-115°F are forecast for inland areas each day, with temperatures reaching the 80s and 90s for central and southern coastal areas. Temperatures in the 90s to around 100°F are expected to extend into northeastern California. These temperatures will be near record territory for many areas, especially Sunday through Thursday when the hottest readings are expected.
  - Warm overnight low temperatures in the 70s and 80s, and even in the 90s for some southern California foothills, will lead to poor recovery and further compound heat risk impacts
- Fire weather conditions will remain highly elevated for many areas due to the combination of hot and dry weather and locally breezy winds, especially in and around the mountains and foothills
  - Any new fires could develop and spread quickly given the record-setting nature of the heat and the ongoing drought
  - A small area of critical fire weather conditions is also expected in and around the Modoc Plateau Sunday and Monday afternoons as windy conditions overlap with the hot and dry weather
- Isolated showers and thunderstorms are expected across southern California and the central and southern Sierra Sunday and Monday, lingering over the Sierra on Tuesday
  - A few storms Sunday will be capable of producing strong winds, small hail, and locally heavy rainfall that may bring some flash flooding over southern California
  - Note that widespread rainfall is not expected
